Why is language polishing needed?

Many editors consider the quality and correctness of the writing in a manuscript when they make initial decisions about whether or not to accept a paper for peer review. Editors and reviewers are more likely to reject a manuscript if it is poorly written, particularly if the quality of the language makes it difficult to understand the science being discussed. Skilled English language editors can “polish” weak or incorrect language to help clarify meaning and improve the readability of texts. The more clearly a manuscript is written, the more likely it is to be reviewed and published.

Our editors

All the editors working for Charlesworth Author Services are highly skilled, native speakers of English and have university degrees in the subject areas of the manuscripts they edit. Our editors are also trained and tested to guarantee they have the most current knowledge needed to edit scientific, technical, and medical texts in specific subject areas. Each manuscript submitted to Author Services is assigned to an editor with subject matter expertise, who will review the text and make suggestions to improve grammar, spelling, syntax, coherence, clarity, and readability.
